

HUMAN RESOURCE MANAGEMENT

The last few years have shown that effective human resource management (HRM) is critical to the ongoing growth and success of organizations. As organizations have dealt with a stream of challenges including evolving workforce priorities - including new modalities of work, geopolitical issues, and the emergence of generative AI in the workplace, ensuring that their human capital was up to the challenge has been critical. Effective HRM ensures that organizations have the right people with the right skills working in the right systems to drive current and future organizational success. To educate future HR professionals capable of delivering on this promise, our HRM program is built around a robust curriculum integrating relevant HR content knowledge and professional skills with a contemporary data-driven perspective that organizations value.

Undergraduate Major in Human Resource Management

For undergraduate curriculum in business, major in human resource management.

The Department of Management and Entrepreneurship offers a major in human resource management. Students will complete the general education requirements (including business foundation courses), supporting courses/major prerequisites, business core requirements for the Bachelor of Science (B.S.) degree, and 21 additional credits in the major.

The HRM program is designed to deliver a well-rounded professional education by equipping students with technical expertise in key functional areas such as talent acquisition, learning and development, continuous performance management, compliance and risk management, and strategic and integrated rewards. Additionally, the program focuses on developing essential soft skills, including professionalism, relationship management, business partnering, teamwork and collaboration, listening, and leadership. Furthermore, it enhances students' critical and analytical thinking, data interpretation, and communication skills, ensuring they are well-prepared for the dynamic field of contemporary human resource management.

Graduate Programs

The Department of Management and Entrepreneurship participates in the PhD in Business and Technology program.

PhD in Business and Technology

The PhD in Business and Technology with a Management (MGMT) specialization is a 74-credit (minimum) curriculum that will prepare students to conduct and publish scholarly research in management, including the sub-fields of strategy, organizational behavior, and human resource management. In addition to curriculum in these core areas, students will also take courses in research methods and the closely related area of entrepreneurship.

The goal of this program is to prepare students to compete for tenure-track positions at leading research universities in the United States and abroad. As a doctoral candidate, students will learn how to conduct impactful research, and they are expected to develop a research pipeline and publish their work in top academic journals before entering the job market.

Student Learning Outcomes

Upon graduation, PhD students will be able to:

1. Understand and advance knowledge.
2. Create knowledge through original research.
3. Teach effectively in an institution of higher education.
