SPORTS MEDIA AND COMMUNICATION

<http://www.greenlee.iastate.edu> (<http://www.greenlee.iastate.edu/>)

The Sports Media and Communication Major prepares students for careers on the sidelines, in the broadcast booth, behind the cameras or in a newsroom. Each student will receive hands-on experiences, building toward a full-scale internship. Coursework in this major focuses on creating compelling content using industry-standard and emerging digital tools. Each student is required to complete a capstone internship experience to practice and refine relevant skills.

The Greenlee School of Journalism and Communication prepares students for communication fields. The school offers four majors:

- Advertising (<https://catalog.iastate.edu/collegeofliberalartsandsciences/advertising/>) Bachelor of Arts (ADVRT)
- Journalism and Mass Communication (https://catalog.iastate.edu/collegeofliberalartsandsciences/journalism_and_mass_communication/) Bachelor of Science (JLMC)
- Public Relations (<https://catalog.iastate.edu/collegeofliberalartsandsciences/publicrelations/>) Bachelor of Science (PR)
- Sports Media and Communication Bachelor of Arts (SMC)

The school coordinates one interdisciplinary major:

- Digital Storytelling (<https://catalog.iastate.edu/collegeofliberalartsandsciences/digitalstorytelling/>) Bachelor of Arts (DSTR)

Student Learning Outcomes

Students who major in Sports Media and Communication will:

- demonstrate proficiency of the ACEJMC Professional Values and Competencies;
- effectively communicate sports stories across multiple platforms, using appropriate content forms, including writing, audio, video, photography and graphics;
- critically think about how communication in sports functions within contemporary culture;
- understand the impact of media rights across the high school, collegiate and professional sports landscapes.
